COMMENTARY

The T. Bailey Multi-Asset Dynamic Fund delivered a small positive return in June, a month shaped by oil volatility, central bank uncertainty and a sharp repricing in parts of the artificial intelligence trade.

On the equity side, several holdings performed strongly. The three specialist Polar Capital funds held covering insurance, healthcare and artificial intelligence rose 10.9%, 7.0% and 3.6% respectively. The Fund also benefited from exposures such as JK Japan and UK value equities, both of which were positive over the month. At the same time, the market became less forgiving towards areas where expectations had run ahead of proof, particularly in AI infrastructure. Broadcom's results were the clearest sign that investors are beginning to ask whether capital spending alone can continue to justify valuations.

Gold fell 10.6%, making it the largest negative contributor, as the appointment of Kevin Warsh to the US Federal Reserve prompted a reassessment of the dollar debasement trade. However, prior trims had already reduced the Fund's gold exposure, which stood at roughly 4.7% of assets at the end of the month.

Elsewhere, fixed income delivered modest support. The Fund's bias towards shorter and intermediate-duration debt meant that gilts, high yield, emerging market debt and hedged US Treasuries all added small positive returns during the month. The portfolio also holds a range of absolute return strategies, which are intended to help in conditions where equities and bonds may not provide straightforward diversification.

Overall, June was a reminder that several market assumptions remain unresolved: the durability of the US-Iran ceasefire, the persistence of energy-led inflation, and the extent to which AI enthusiasm can be monetised by end-users rather than suppliers alone. The Fund remains positioned to live with that uncertainty through a mix of growth assets, resilient cash-flow exposures and diversifiers rather than reliance on a single outcome.

FUND ATTRIBUTES

The Multi-Asset Dynamic Fund is a flexible portfolio designed for investors seeking steady long-term growth with controlled levels of risk. It targets a return of UK inflation (CPI) +3% per annum over the long-term to help your money keep pace with the cost of living by actively spreading investments across shares, bonds, commodities, specialist diversifiers, and other assets. This dynamic approach adjusts to changing market conditions for you, aiming to provide a smoother journey than investing in shares alone.
