COMMENTARY

Despite no let-up in geopolitical tensions, risk assets continued to enjoy a positive environment as they have done since the end of October last year and despite a distinct reduction in interest rate optimism since year-end.

While some larger US tech companies dominated the headlines, not always for the right reason (Tesla and Apple), Japanese equities were also grabbing the headlines as the Nikkei index bested its past peak set over forty years ago. Other indices reached new levels, notably the S&P 500 index in the US where equities were buoyed by better economic data and a central banker keen to reassure investors of his desire to cut interest rates in 2024.

European equity performance has been reasonably good given the backdrop of slower growth, recognising that Europe contains its own global company thematic leaders. Demand for cheap UK companies with strong, cash generative balance sheets translated into more merger and acquisition activity plus share buybacks in the UK.

Developed market government and corporate bonds had a moderately positive month to round out a difficult quarter as interest rate reduction optimism faded, primarily in the US. As a consequence, Euro and UK bond markets fared better than their US counterparts with UK gilts enjoying a decent March to offset a negative quarter. Credit spreads managed to grind lower in general.

Japanese government bond yields paradoxically fell after the Bank of Japan's historic ending of Japan's negative interest rate policy.

Gold continued its 2024 upward trend and closed the March quarter at an all-time nominal high aided by significant central bank purchases, notably China's.

Copper increased after nineteen major copper smelters in China agreed on production cuts during March. The longer-term picture for copper is underpinned by supply constraints.

Oil also performed strongly in March on supply concerns.

There was little significant activity in March but nonetheless, it was pleasing to witness the good absolute and relative performance of some of our long term themes. Energy transition's rebound was welcome and remains one of the key themes in the fund.

Copper and gold held for differing reasons were notable contributors to a good month.
