COMMENTARY

Global equity markets had an acceptable month overall, despite a rough start. Several factors contributed to market stress, not least the Bank of Japan's interest rate outlook sharply strengthening the Yen as carry trades unwound. Although positive news for the currency, Japan's equity market over-reacted to the downside before quickly rebounding with its strongest daily gain since 2008.

The US Federal Reserve's annual symposium at Jackson Hole highlighted a shift in focus at the central bank, away from inflation as its primary concern in favour of economic growth and labour market signals. This opens the door for potential interest rate cuts and follows the Bank of England's 0.25% cut in base rates at the start of the month. As growth and inflation both converge towards 2% and interest rates ease, conditions are emerging for a style shift within equity markets beyond the recent mega-cap US tech leaders and towards broader equity returns.

Having reduced exposure to the RobecoSAM Smart Materials Fund earlier in the year as we became less comfortable with apparent repositioning of this fund's investment approach and wider demands on key figures within its management team a recent meeting with them did little to allay our concerns. We exited the position fully at the start of the month, allowing cash to rise in the portfolios ahead of a more volatile period in equity markets.

Across investment themes Healthcare and Insurance holdings were the stronger performers over the month whilst UK equities fared relatively well regionally. Sentiment towards the UK has been improving as the political landscape has become more stable post this year's general election. In addition, growth in the UK has gathered some positive momentum and a cautious Bank of England has remained hawkish, both of which have helped support the story for Sterling. Having languished on low valuations for several years the relative attractiveness of UK equities is a current theme reflected in the fund allocating a quarter of its equity book to UK listed companies.

Priced in US dollars, exposure to both copper and gold via exchange traded products gained on the month. However, translation of those returns to Sterling was a headwind that saw gold marginally outperform and copper underperform over the month.
